The Daily News is the largest and most widely read newspaper in the New York metropolitan market, and the sixth largest daily and fifth largest Sunday newspaper in the country. The Daily News continues to lead all other newspapers as the paper of choice for New York City residents with an average daily readership of 2.5 million. In addition to the print readership, NYDailyNews.com features over 16 million unique users per month, according to the May 2009 WebTrends report.

The News continues its long-standing tradition as "New York's Hometown Newspaper" with a strong focus on local coverage. The Daily News' in-depth investigations and hard-hitting coverage of politics and local news has time and again influenced change and affected policy decisions on issues important to New Yorkers. The Daily News won the 2007 Pulitzer Prize for Editorial Writing for its campaign on behalf of ill Ground Zero workers.
